FIRST AND SECOND IMPRESSIONS

SECOND impressions of Tonopah are much better than those gained at first glance. That is because there are neither claims nor aims at superficiality. Exterior count for nothing here, neither in people nor in their habitations. The man or woman whom you meet upon arrival is usually clothed in keeping with the climatic conditions that happen to be prevailing at the moment, or the duties that may engross. The man may be in corduroy or the woman in gingham, but that does not signify that the wardrobes of either do not contain the apparel of the day and mode. Conversation is also in keeping with the environment. It is likely to be breezy with coined expressions, native to the mines and to the desert, spiced with newly minted words which have no synonym in the lexicons or etymological lineage. Yet persons using the expressions locally vinted have usually at their command the Lindlay Murray of eastern college towns, spiced with apt quotations. But it is not usually commanded to service unless sartorial environment corresponds.

This much for the people, now for their habitations. Viewed from Oddie, Brougher or Butler, Tonopah is what our friend Ruggles would term a "collection of huts and hovels, with an occasional detached villa." That is because Tonopah has delightfully disappointed the people who bulid the city. With the exception of the few who erected brick and stone structures three to five stories in height, equipped with modern conveniences, and who have been well repaid for the long chance they took, the majority of the business and residential buildings are of cheap material hastily assembled. That was because Tonopah is a precious metal camp and rarely do such continue existence more than a decade and even then with declining prosperity. Tonopah seems to possess reincarnation powers, for no sooner has an ore body pinched or grown lean in value than another is discovered, thus keeping its production of $10,000,000 a year practically unchanged, with assurance that the only variation in the decade to come will be the augmentation of the output.

But while the people who reside in Tonopah have residences that present rough exteriors, within there is comfort, even luxury, for it was reasoned from the beginning that even if houses are not portable, their contents are, hence the lares and penates to be found in brownstones and marble fronts.

Once upon a time the cost of water in Tonopah was excessive. Nor had it been proven that vegetation would thrive here. There was but a single tree in Tonopah in those days. It was planted in front of the Tonopah club and lavishly was it cared for—with water costing ten cents a bucket. As a matter of fact this tree died of over-irrigation. But in its stead there are now hundreds of trees in the city and of lawns there are a great number, with the beds and vegetable and small fruit gardens, each tilled with the utmost care, while vines are trailed to the roofs, hiding the scaling paint and the rough weatherboards. The reduction in the cost of water is working wonders in Tonopah's exterior and with the vegetation seems to have come a greater interest in home life. The old rough exterior of Tonopah is becoming susceptible to the loving, clinging tendrils of the vine and the incense of the rose. In time this city will be like eastern towns in appearance. It will take pride in exteriors. It is delightful to contemplate, but one vaguely wonders if there will not be a compensating loss in the passing of the pleasing contrasts we now enjoy.

DON'T BELIEVE THE GAZETTE WOULD WELSH

IT IS to be hoped and expected that the Reno Evening Gazette owners will assume responsibility for the acts of its circulation agent while in Tonopah. The young ladies here who entered the contest for a free trip to the exposition were informed by the agent that the girl getting the greatest number of votes in the state would be provided free with a complete traveling outfit. This was not printed in the Gazette's columns, but was information privately conveyed to the contestants by the agent of that paper and used as a leverage in obtaining subscriptions to the Gazette. Miss Lavina Shields of Tonopah worked most industriously and led the state by more than 22,000 votes, with the ambition to secure a pretty new dress as well as the free trip, but her hopes were dashed when the Gazette informed her that there would be no new dress, that the agent wasn't authorized to make such an offer, besides the girls were told that they must advance their own expenses to Reno, where the money would be returned to them. Naturally the young ladies, particularly Miss Shields, felt much aggrieved. They feel confident, however, that the Gazette will recognize its responsibility for the acts of its agent and "come through."

AND SUCH IS WHITE SLAVERY

THE lessees of the Big Casino are charged with violating the Mann act because they employed a bevy of women entertainers at their concert and dancing hall. The government deems them to be white slavers because one of the girls is alleged to have acted immorally since coming here, although not in the Casino nor during her working hours.

As a matter of fact, the girls in question are all professional entertainers, cabaret singers and vaudeville dancers and from outward appearances they are honest working girls. Furthermore they do not room in the Casino and at the close of their shift they are paid off by the proprietors, who have no knowledge of where they go or what they do until they come to work again. Perhaps Al Thackery and Don Ritchie have erred in not hiring chaperones for them or insisting that they room and board at the Y. W. C. A.

Great interest attaches to the meetings which will be held in this city tomorrow for the purpose of deciding whether or not the Tonopah Extension, Merger and Victor companies will merge, or, rather, whether or not the owners of Victor and Merger will accept Tonopah Extension stock for their holdings. It is understood that a number of problems are to be worked out and a number of matters taken into consideration, which do not appear now to the lay mind. The meetings will be participated in by practically the entire personnel of the ownership.

Difference In Drug Buying

Drug buying is an art. There is truth in the statement that "Goods well bought are half sold." This is due to the fact that it is easier to sell people what they want than to attempt to sell them just anything.

We are particular drug buyers, insisting on quality goods, and when goods are received they are stocked in a way to guard against deterioration.
